In order to facilitate transparency in the home buying process, the Indian Government passed the RERA Act in May 2016. Soon after, RERA was brought into action to address concerns of homebuyers, builders, brokers, and other stakeholders of the real estate industry. Since its inception, RERA has implemented many reforms and more are on the anvil. That's why, as a homebuyer or a builder, knowing RERA rules and guidelines will help you navigate the real estate landscape with ease.

What is RERA

RERA stands for the Real Estate Regulatory Authority. This was formed to bring about transparency in the real estate sector. The RERA Act was brought in to eradicate problems within the sector. It aims to reduce project delays and mis-selling. At present, it is compulsory for all builders or developers to carry out RERA registration before they start a project.

Which Projects Come Under RERA

- Commercial and residential projects including plotted development.
- Projects measuring more than 500 sq mts or 8 units.
- Projects without Completion Certificate, before commencement of the Act.
- The project is only for the purpose of renovation / repair / re-development which does not involve re-allotment and marketing, advertising, selling or new allotment of any apartments, plot or building in the real estate project, will not come under RERA.
- Each phase is to be treated as standalone real estate project requiring fresh registration.

Benefits of RERA for Home buyers

- Builders have to disclose every detail of the project on the website of authority and update these on a regular basis.
- The buyer will have to pay only on the basis of carpet area (area within walls). The builder cannot charge them for the super built-up area (lift, balcony, stairs, and lobby).
- Timely completion of projects as 70% of the money collected from the customer has to be transferred in a separate bank account and can be used only for the purpose of completing the construction of the project.
- Any delay in completion of the project will require the developer to pay an interest rate above SBI's Marginal cost of lending rate to the buyer for a delayed period.
- Any Structural defect in the building will be the responsibility of the builder for a period of 5 years.
- Any disputes with the buyers need to be resolved within 120 days.
